The Workers of England Union is different.

Many Trade Unions use a work colleague because it's cheaper, the Workers of England Union feels that using work-placed union representation is actually a disadvantage.

It inevitably leads to a scenario where your representative is required to speak up for you before their own senior managers. This can put undue pressure on the representative. He or she may be unwilling to create waves for themselves and if this happens it can only mean sub-standard representation for the member.

Using external, independent representation completely eliminates these complications, meaning we can concentrate on our members and no one else.

Proper Representation Means Proper Protection.
